INDY FOOD, FARM AND FAMILY COALITION

The Indianapolis Food, Farm and Family Coalition works to make Indianapolis a more food - secure city through education, awareness, public programs, and connecting consumers to farmers.

We envision a food - secure Indianapolis in which all community residents obtain a safe, culturally appropriate, nutritionally adequate diet through a sustainable food system that maximizes community self-reliance and social justice.

Our members include volunteer representatives from government, consumer, business, farm, multi-cultural, anti-hunger advocacy, faith and community development groups who are working together to bridge the gap between producers and consumers.

We focus on assessment, outreach, and development of deeper collaborations with other organizations and individuals working on the issue of a sustainable and local food system. We strive to increase knowledge and skills in gardening, preserving, and increasing ability to eat healthy, sustainable food.

Why Buy Local?

Every time you purchase food, you make a choice that's more important than just what is for dinner. When you buy local food, you:

Help keep farmers on the land, keep the local economy strong, and preserve our agricultural heritage.

When purchasing directly from farmers, you have the chance to talk about the methods they use and the care they take to grow your food.

Help the environment. When you buy local, fewer fossil fuels are burned to transport your food across the country or between continents and less packaging is needed. Supporting those who use sustainable farming practices also means that the land is treated in environmentally sensitive ways, which prevents soil erosion and protects the quality of our water.

Get to taste delicious food. Buying local means you can enjoy eating with the seasons, preparing meals that showcase what's farm fresh and harvested at its peak that same day.

When you consider how this is all connected, you realize that your food choices really do make a difference. Your decision to buy local food helps create a stronger, more sustainable regional food system.

WHO'S IN THE LOCAL FOOD GUIDE?

FARMS

This Guide includes farms in Central Indiana that meet at least one of the following definitions:

Certified Organic: The USDA National Organic Program outlines the strict uniform standards that farms must meet in order to sell their products as organic. Organic growing methods replenish soil fertility, and prohibit use of persistent chemical pesticides and fertilizers.

Certified Naturally Grown: This certification program, administered by a nonprofit organization, is tailored to small-scale farms that observe growing practices based on the highest principles and ideals of organic farming.

Sustainable: Sustainable growing methods aim to produce food while minimizing damage to the surrounding physical and social environments.

Biodynamic: Biodynamics works with the healthgiving forces of nature to improve the health of the planet and its people. Farms can be Certified Biodynamic by Demeter® USA.

Grassfed: Pertaining to livestock husbandry, grassfed systems that raise livestock on pasture are ecologically sustainable, humane, and result in healthier meat, dairy, and eggs.

Farmers' Markets: The farmers' markets in this Guide are all producer markets where you can buy fresh produce, meats, and dairy directly from the farmer who grew the food. The Guide does not include markets that predominately feature brokers or resellers, or markets that do not feature local producers selling locally grown food products.

KEY

Special icons indicate the products and services offered by each farm:

Dairy

Eggs

Meat/
Seafood

CSA: This farm offers Community Supported Agriculture subscriptions.

U-Pick: This farm welcomes visitors to pick their own produce. Call ahead to confirm hours and harvest availability.

Agritourism: Farms displaying this symbol host visitors interested in learning about agriculture. Call ahead to schedule your visit.

On-Farm Market: This farm has a stand or store that sells their products, and maybe the products of nearby farms, too.
